

THE FAMILY TREE

OF
JOHN ABBOT

Compiled by Stanley H. Abbott

► A man's parents are 2, his grandparents 4, his great-grandparents 8, his great-great-grandparents are 16. Five generations back there were 32 ancestors. Counting only 10 generations back there have been almost 1500 strains who have contributed their protoplasm to a particular individual. In 20 generations, a period of about 500 years, there were 1,442,176. For 30 generations, or about 750 years ago, the exact number is 1,956,282,976, or a little less than the whole total human population of the globe today. We are forced to conclude that something of every human being alive at that time has entered into the making of everyone alive today. And the same holds for future generations.

PREFACE

In compiling the data in this book, it is only natural that the question was asked several times why Stanley Abbott, a very remote relative to this group, was doing this work.

The answer is simple. I compiled my own family group and found it interesting. When one of the John Abbot group in Nebraska asked me to work on their line, I had the time and proceeded to do so, even though there were only four of this group living in Nebraska. Without the data furnished by Mrs. Bertha Abbott (see #45) and her encouragement, the task would have been hopeless. Another question frequently asked was, "What relation are you to us?" To answer this briefly, the following chart makes the best explanation:

George Abbot (1) meaning 1st generation in America.

In doing this work, several interesting things have shown up. The use of a person's middle name is very confusing for indexing, so first names are always used. It is interesting to note that a few relatives have been entirely lost to the knowledge of anyone in the group. That is indicated in several places where "no data" is shown. Generally speaking, women are more interested in keeping records than men. Others are indifferent and some find the subject quite boring. The biggest trouble is the delay in replies to data questionnaires. Sometimes it takes 3 or 4 requests.

The fun comes in putting the puzzle together. Starting with a few, each letter brings a few more names into the circle so that the plan for keeping names sorted properly must be revised week after week. Printing costs are high and a gamble must be taken that enough books will be sold to cover the costs.

The real payment for the work of putting the data together is the many fine letters of appreciation from people who think a family record is worth while and who are proud of their ancestry. The final payment comes when someone in the year 2000 wants to find his ancestors and locates this book. The tragedy is the many people left out that we cannot locate.

Fame generally comes after death. There are 3 people in this book who were deservedly famous while living. Two of them were well known on a state-wide basis. The first was Carlisle Abbott (17), who is known to most of you. The second is Othman Abbott (22), first Lieut. Governor of Nebraska.

His daughter, Grace Abbott (48) was nationally known for her work in Child Welfare. Many others have been prominent in their own communities.

Working entirely by mail on this book has its disadvantages. Many interesting stories handed down from the past have been lost from lack of personal contact. Lack of time does not permit following up some of the lost relatives who might be located.

The book has been double indexed, so that any person in the book can be located, but in addition, has been grouped by branches, so that closer relatives can be identified.

Directions for using this book. The numbers to the left of each name indicate their appearance in the book, and every person has a number. If that person has no descendants, then there is no additional data elsewhere in the book. However, if the number is in heavy type, it means that number will appear later in the book in the center of the page, with detailed data about that person. As a result, any person's ancestry or descendants can be located with ease. To save space, symbols are used such as d. for died, b. for born, m. for married, dau. for daughter and no ch. for no children. The data has all been triple checked for accuracy and even so I'm sure there may be errors. It is hoped that they are not serious.

THE JOHN ABBOT STORY

John Abbot is descended from George Abbot (1) of Andover, Mass. via William (2), Phillip (3), Abiel (4), Abiel (5) and John (6). In other words, John (6) represents the 6th generation of this group in America.

The descendants of John Abbot (6) of Hatley, Canada owe a debt of gratitude to a group of New England Abbots who, in 1847, compiled a Register of the Descendants of George Abbot (1) of Andover, Mass.

The book is small and the print is fine, but the records are so complete on such a large number of people that it forms the foundation of many a genealogy. From 1640, when George (1) arrived, to 1847, when the Abbot Register was published, is over 200 years. The circumstances of that period did not encourage travel so that the spread of inhabitants was fairly well confined to the New England states. True, a few hardy pioneers had ventured over the mountains to the new born states east of the Mississippi, but the great majority of the Abbots had stayed in the East.

The Abbot Register shows that a few Abbots moved out of New England prior to the Revolutionary War. A history book says, that following the Revolution, the new government doubled and tripled the taxes of those who had remained loyal to England (called Loyalists) with the result that 100,000 people left for England and Canada to avoid these taxes. The first 4 generations of Abbots had lived pretty much in Mass., Conn.,

Maine, Vt. and N.H., but in 1781 Abiel (5), with his son John, moved to Canada. We do not know if he was a Loyalist or why he moved.

He settled in Canada 12 miles north of the Vt. state boundary on the shores of Lake Mephremagog in a small community called Hatley. The nearest town of note was Magog. Both located in Quebec Province. There is now no trace of Hatley. A recent letter from the Postmaster at Magog states there are no Abbots in that area at present. Another letter from an Abbot descendant living in Quebec Province, who is descended from Colbe (6) Abbot, a brother of John (6) says she cannot locate any Abbot graves around Magog.

Abiel (5) passed on (no date) and son John (6) continued to farm at Hatley and raised 11 children after his marriage to Lydia Boynton, from 1807 to 1828. Presumably John (6) continued to farm at Hatley until his death. By 1847, when the Abbot Register was published, John's sons, Lathrop, Abiel and Chauncy were also farming at Hatley. Another son, John, was a farmer at Stockton, N.Y. Three girls, Ruth, Semantha and Melvina may have married but were never referred to again. Lewis died young and brothers Harvey, Alvin and Carlisle were only mentioned in the 1847 Register. This completes the data in the 1847 book.

In 1963 we try to pick up the fragments of the record from 1847 to 1900 and find that much is missing. We are given some clues in a remarkable book written by Carlisle (7), the youngest son, in his 88th year. This book, written and published in 1917, gives us a small picture of the activities on the Abbot farm at Hatley and a reason for the great migration from Canada to the central United States. Canada was demanding that her American settlers take an Oath of Allegiance to the King. This they were unwilling to do, and with the lure of cheap, good land out west, the Abbot family began to leave Hatley.

At this point, you will note that all the Abbots referred to in the Abbot Register use only one T in the name. Why all the Abbotts who came west added an extra T is a mystery that no one has solved. The many New England cousins of these western Abbotts generally use only one T.

Lathrop (7) had 3 children born in Hatley. It is presumed he moved to Etna, Minn. (now Spring Valley) because his son Lewis married there in 1867 and a daughter Lydia is reported to have married a Bonesteele and had 3 sons but there is no confirmation of this. We do not know when and where Lathrop died. After his son Lewis married, the children were born successively in Minn. 1867, Iowa 1869 and Nebraska 1873. His wife deserted him in Nebraska, taking the 2 younger daughters with her and leaving the son, Warren, about 12 years old, with his father. These two gradually worked west, arriving in Oregon in 1883.

Abiel (7) moved to Illinois about 1850 and on to California about 1870. His offspring almost outnumber those of his brothers and sisters combined. Most of the children were born in Canada but the last 3 were born in Illinois. All of them moved to California except Othman and Marcus. These two started for California in 1867 but were halted in Nebraska because of Indian attacks. They settled there; one to become a lawyer and the other a farmer. Abiel lived out his life in Salinas, Calif. There are far more John (6) descendants here than in any other city.

John (7) was a farmer in New York State. He started for California in 1852 with brothers Carlisle and Alvin. He had with him his wife and 3 children and the trip was made in a covered wagon. His daughter was educated in Petaluma. The records on her 2 brothers are very sketchy. They lived and died in California. They married and had children but no grandchildren, so that line stopped there.

Chauncy (7) came west in the early 1860's looking for cheap land. His nephews, Othman and Marcus, came to his ranch in Central Nebraska on their way to Calif. After a few years, he settled permanently in the western part of the state. With only one surviving child, his descendants are few.

Carlisle (7) went west to Illinois in 1844; then to Beloit, Wis. in 1849 with his brother Alvin to visit another brother. In 1850 he and Alvin went to California to look for gold. Carlisle returned to Beloit in 1852 to get married and returned to California on an 1852 wagon train. He was a very ambitious and successful farmer, politician and businessman, and in 1917, at age 88, he wrote a most interesting book of his adventures; a short review of which is printed elsewhere in this book.

Alvin (7) and Harvey (7) have been lost as far as having any report on them or their descendants.

The strange part of this review is that the descendants of the California Abbotts apparently lost contact with the Lewis (7) descendants in Oregon and knew nothing about them. The above review sums up the trek to the west of the John (6) Abbot group. Their individual records appear in detail.

The 3 sisters, Ruth 6, Semantha 6, and Melvina 6 may have married and stayed in Canada. At least, no one seems to know anything about them. One thing for sure, these Abbotts had the nerve to tackle the great unknown. Their descendants can be proud of them.

We have now informed you in a general way about the first 6 generations of Abbotts in America. As previously stated, this information would not be available today if it were not for the 1847 publication of the Genealogical Register of the Descendants of George Abbot. The Introduction of this book tells so well the problems of early American settlers, that it is printed in full in the following pages. Included also, to tell about life in New England in the early 1800's, is a speech made in 1888 by Dr. Abiel Abbot (6) 4th cousin to John Abbot (6) the subject of this book.

THE 1847 BOOK

THERE is a satisfaction to most persons in being able to trace their lineage to remote ancestors; in knowing where they lived, and through what scenes and hardships, prosperity and adversity, they passed, and in recollecting what benefits they conferred on their posterity. As nothing is certainly known of George Abbot, previously to his emigrating from England to this country, his settling at Andover seems a suitable epoch, from which to commence an account of his family and descendants. Believing that it would be useful and gratifying to many, a Genealogical Register has been prepared as complete as in the power of the compilers.

GEORGE ABBOT and the first settlers in Andover were Puritans. Under the tyranny of the Tudors and Stuarts, many left their native country to enjoy civil and religious liberty. They were required to conform to rites and ceremonies, in their view, inconsistent with the true worship of God. The great prevailing motive, which induced our ancestors to leave their pleasant homes, was to enjoy the inalienable right of worshipping God according to the conviction of their own minds, and their understanding of his word. They did not come here to accumulate property, to live in ease and splendor, or acquire fame. They had vastly higher and holier views and aims, to obey God and prepare themselves for heaven. With these motives and aims, and firm trust in God, they, with fortitude and cheerfulness, endured the toils and sufferings incident to subduing the wilderness, a severe climate and cruel savages.

George Abbot emigrated, as tradition reports, from Yorkshire, England, about 1640, and came over in the same vessel with Hannah Chandler, who, several years after, became his wife. It is this year, (1847,) two hundred and four years, since he, with the first settlers, a band of Puritans, erected their humble cabins, in Andover, made of logs and covered with thatch, or bark from trees. How different from the large, commodious, and beautiful dwellings, which we now see every where standing around ! Here they began labors, to which they had never been accustomed. Here all was new and strange, a severe climate, a howling, gloomy wilderness.

The clearing up of the forest, always laborious, even after long experience and skill, with improved instruments, is peculiarly fatiguing, tedious, and discouraging to the inexperienced with instruments ill adapted to the work. In a new settlement, frequent resort was had to the forest, the brook, and river to supply their necessities. They knew not the use of that invaluable root, the potato, so useful and indispensable to us. Their fare must have been what now would be deemed hard and intolerable.

These sons of the forest had sound hearts, firm and fixed resolutions, and persevering effort. Their faith in God never failed. They kept constantly in view the grand design of their coming to this wilderness. Their notions of religious liberty were not mere speculations ; their views were rational ; their purposes were strong ; their principles were not to be shaken by any temporal consideration ; their consciences were not to be swayed by flattery or frowns ; they were determined to obey God rather than man. They never forgot their main object ; to worship God according to his word, without the dictation of man, and to train up their families in the way they should go. Accordingly, the few, that began the settlement at Andover, took their minister with them ; and the very next year after entering the forest, they were prepared to have a church organized, and their minister ordained. We wonder how this could be. They had faith in the Savior's instructions, and were resolved to obey them ; to deny themselves ; to seek first the kingdom of God. The fire never went out on the family altar. There were warm hearts around the warm household hearth ; the morning and evening incense never ceased to ascend, an acceptable offering to Jehovah. They followed the example of faithful Abraham, not only in leaving their native country, but in commanding their household to keep the way of the Lord ; and their precepts were enforced, as were his, by their own holy example. The Sabbath was a day of rest from worldly cares and labors, and from amusements and sports, which they left their native country to avoid. Hence the Sabbath, in New England, continues to be observed with commendable strictness by their descendants. It was their great concern to imbue the minds of their offspring with sound religious truth, and to transmit to succeeding generations those Christian principles and virtues, which sustained them in all their trials and persecutions, and rendered them cheerful and happy amidst all their hardships and sufferings.

To the Puritans are we indebted for our civil liberty and free institutions, as well as for our religious privileges. Reformation from Popery was not in the intention of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, any farther than to become Pope, and secure the revenues of the Church ; and so far as the Protestant Reformation and religious freedom have been enjoyed in England, they are the result of the struggles of the Puritans. Even Hume, no partial friend of the Puritans, is constrained to admit, "that whatever spark of liberty we have remaining to us is owing to the Puritans alone." The tree of liberty in this country was of their planting and culture.

It might, under other circumstances, seem unbecoming in us to speak of the virtues of the descendants of our ancestor, but in a Genealogical Register prepared for the family, it will not be thought to involve any impropriety, if we commend to the living those, as we think, characteristic good qualities, for which we rightly honor the dead. Most races of men, if we trace them down through successive generations, are seen to possess peculiar traits, which distinguish them from others, and which they very probably inherit from their common progenitor. And any one, familiar with those descended from GEORGE ABBOT, cannot but be struck with the fact, that, from his time to the present, they have, as a family or tribe, possessed a marked character of their own. The number of his grandchildren was at least seventy-three ; of these as many as forty-four had families ; thirty of these settled in Andover. A large number of his posterity remains there.

In general, his descendants have been good husbandmen, industrious, sober, living within their income. Some have been enterprising, and have made good farms from the forest ; others have much improved old farms. It is a little remarkable, that so many farms continue in succession in the same family. Four of the seven farms occupied by George and his sons, are now in possession of the descendants of the first settlers, and another was kept in the family more than a century; and another more than eighty years.

Scarcely any one has become a pauper. Some have been poor, but few have been reduced to necessitous circumstances. Very few have been distinguished for wealth; most of them have been in the happy state, for which Agur prayed, a competency with contentment.

They have been friendly to their friends, attentive to their relations, hospitable to strangers, ready to assist the unfortunate, and compassionate to the infirm and poor. Children have been dutiful to parents and respectful to superiors; parents have been attentive to bring up their children to some kind of business, and to imbue their minds with religious and moral principles.

As members of the community, they have been industrious, temperate, fond of home, minding their own business, honest in their dealings, punctual in paying their debts, and good citizens. They have been modest, unassuming, willing to be excused from public business and public notice. They have been remarkable for peace and good neighborhood; have carefully avoided litigation and hazardous speculations.

They have been remarkable for constancy and punctuality in attending public worship, and other means of religion; for willingness to maintain religious institutions, and for adherence to Congregational order. They have been catholic in sentiment and feeling, claiming and freely granting the rights of conscience and private judgment. They have been assiduous in educating their families religiously, equally free from fanaticism and indifference.

In dress and equipage, they have been simple, using what is suitable to their station and business. They have avoided luxury and dissipation; and a number has attained to a good old age.

They have generally improved their privileges, been well informed, and have surpassed many of like advantages. Some of them have been men of learning, and have promoted the literature and morals of their country, as teachers and ministers of the gospel. Most of them have been solicitous to give their children opportunity of gaining information suitable to their condition; and to effect this, some of them have made great exertions, and practised much self-denial.

INTRODUCTION.

EDUCATION.— Of the descendants of ¹ George Abbot one hundred and three have graduated at college; and fourteen have been, or are now, students at college. It is probable, that some, who have received a collegiate education, are not included in this account.

Wilton, N H., having a population of one thousand and thirty-three, has been distinguished for liberal provision for the common schools, and for the number educated at college. Thirty have received a college education; of these, seventeen are descendants of ¹ George A., and fourteen of ¹ John A.; the first graduate was in 1787. Of descendants of emigrants from Wilton, twenty-two have been students at college since the commencement of the present century; of these, eighteen descended from ¹ George A.

It is satisfactory to know, that those favored with a collegiate education have not wasted their talents, been drones, or vicious members of society. Though they have not been brilliant and distinguished as public men, they have honorably and usefully discharged the duties of their stations, and have contributed their share to the common interests of society, in promoting good learning and good morals.

CLEARING LAND.— As in the old towns clearing off the forest has for a long time ceased, it may be proper to describe the manner of doing it. The clearing away of the forest was a tedious and arduous task. Most of the land in Andover was probably cleared by felling the trees, cutting them out and piling them with the brush. After burning the heaps of wood, and digging up the ground with a mattock or breaking-up hoe, the grain was sown. The settlers in Concord and Wilton, after some experience, felled the trees and chopped them into suitable lengths for piling before burning; but improving upon this method, the trees were felled, limbed down, if necessary, which was not often the case, and when sufficiently dry, the fire was suffered to run through, which consumed the brush and small wood. Soon after burning, the logs were cut into such length as to be easily piled. Sometimes, when there was a brisk wind, fire was used in cutting off the logs, which was done by placing a stick of wood across the log, and setting fire to it where it lay across. When the stick was nearly burned off, it was put further on. A man would sometimes, by the aid of fire, cut off in one day as much, as he could in two days with an axe only. The wood was then piled, commonly by one man with a pair of oxen to haul the logs and two men to pile them. The heaps were set on fire, and poked up once or twice and burnt off. After rain, to neutralize the ashes, the grain was sown and harrowed in. The plough was seldom used. The grass seed was commonly sown the next spring, when the snow was going off. The crop of grain was often large and paid for clearing the land, and sometimes for the land also.

Houses. — The first houses were built of logs, some of which were hewn into plank five or six inches thick, and fifteen or twenty inches wide. The floors were made of the same. They were covered with thatch or bark; the chimney of stone, sometimes of small sticks of wood plastered with clay. Few of them had glass windows. The first windows were of diamond glass, set in lead. The second meeting-house in the South Parish, Andover, built in 1732, had diamond glass windows. The log houses were occupied a number of years. Probably the garrison house, in which George A. and his son John lived, was built at the commencement of Philip's war. This was of wood, of two stories, the second story jutting over about two feet, with port-holes, to prevent the Indians from setting it on fire. In time of war or apprehension of danger, there was a garrison house in every neighborhood, to which the inhabitants resorted for the night. They went armed in companies to their work in the fields, while one was employed to watch. Block houses were built in the common fields. None of the garrison houses remain in Andover; and very few in New England.

The middle part of the old red house near the garrison house, was built for ³ John A. about 1704; twenty-eight by twenty feet, two stories, chimney, entry and stairs at the end; the chimney ten feet four inches by eight feet; the fireplace between the jambs, eight feet three inches, three feet four inches deep; four feet eight inches high, two ovens in the back, mantel-piece of wood; the floor about six inches below the top of the sill. The west end, one room and small kitchen, was built about 1732, when ⁴ John A. was married, in which his father lived; and was occupied by ⁵ John A., who was married in 1758; in which he died in 1818. The east room was built about 1752. The house is occupied by two families. Houses built before the close of the last century, were nearly all fronting the south.

The oldest house remaining in Andover, now owned by Dea. Charles Bailey, was built by Governor S. Bradstreet, in which, September, 1672, his wife Ann died, distinguished among the early matrons of our country for her literary powers and a volume of poems.

TRAVELLING AND ROADS. — For many years, the first settlers in the country had rough and bad roads. These were improved slowly, as the inhabitants were engaged in clearing the land, providing themselves with food and necessary accommodations, and had few articles to carry to market. Many of the roads were mere foot-paths, or bridle-ways. The country was not so soon stocked with horses as with neat cattle, and very few horses were trained for draught. The saddle only was used. All horses were trained to carry double, and women were accustomed to ride on a pillion. ⁶ Jeremiah Abbot rode from Andover to Wilton, forty-five miles, in a day, with his mother behind him on a pillion. Carriages for pleasure or for conveying persons were very little used before the war of the Revolution. The pillion in Andover was laid aside about the close of the last century; since which time, roads being greatly improved, travelling has been chiefly in carriages.

In making a road through the wilderness, a surveyor and his party, with compass and chain, explore the country around, and where they find the land suitable for a road, the trees are spotted by cutting out a piece of the bark, and at the end of every mile the number is marked on the nearest tree. Then follow the axemen, who clear away the bushes and fell the trees in a space of one or two rods wide. In wet land and over brooks, causeways and bridges are formed of logs. Roads were not brought to perfection at once, but were first made passable for single horses and teams of oxen. The expense of making and keeping roads in repair falls very heavily on new towns.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY. — Industry and economy are essentials in new settlements. All are trained to order and activity. There are no drones; all are working bees. All rise early; reading the Scriptures and prayer are attended to, and all are prepared for business. The first settlers of Andover and other towns obtained much food from the water. Salmon and shad were plentiful in the Merrimack, and were taken in other rivers. Alewives and other fish were abundant in smaller streams. The forest yielded some meat, as moose, deer, and smaller animals, and fowls, as turkeys, and partridges. For breakfast, bread and milk, luncheon at nine or ten o'clock; dinner at twelve, of meat, or fish, and vegetables, and often boiled Indian pudding; luncheon at four or five o'clock, bread and milk for supper. In winter, broth, bean, corn, or pea porridge for breakfast, and sometimes for supper. Porridge was continued till after the revolutionary war. Tea was rarely used, unless for company, before 1783; coffee less used; chocolate was early used for company.

The clothing was almost wholly homespun. Sheep were kept for their wool; and flax was raised on every farm. The wool was wrought by women into various articles of men's and women's wear and household furniture. This was done by hand cards, spinning wheel, and loom. The carding machine was introduced about the commencement of the present century. Men often wore deerskin breeches; for every day, often, a woollen frock, striped with blue or black, or tow frock, dyed with oak bark, a sheepskin leather apron and breeches. The flax was pulled and spread for rotting by women and boys, and dressed in the winter by men. It was wrought into various articles of clothing, &c. for family use, and for sale. This gave much employment for the women. This kind of labor has been almost wholly superseded by the woollen and cotton mill.

SOCIAL INTERCOURSE.—Among the early settlers much friendliness, sympathy, and entire equality prevailed. Envy, unfriendly competition, and pride of birth, or wealth, were unknown. Every one rejoiced in the prosperity of his neighbor, and partook of his adversity. Ready assistance was rendered to the sick and unfortunate. All felt as belonging to the same family. There was frequent interchange of labor. Their visits were not spoiled by heartless ceremony or expensive entertainments. They were cheerful, cordial, frank and full of good humor. No expensive, gaudy dress; a clean checked apron and handkerchief, and homespun gown, were sufficient. Women would go early in the afternoon, carry their work with them, and return home before sunset, to take care of domestic concerns. Patriarchial simplicity, respect, and submission prevailed in their families.

THE SABBATH.—The Sabbath was most strictly observed by our ancestors. On Saturday evening all work was laid aside, and preparation for the Sabbath was attended to. The master of the family shaved himself. The evening, after supper, was spent in reading the Bible and religious books, and in family prayer. Sunday morning, after necessary work for breakfast was performed, was employed in reading the Scriptures and other books and in prayer, till meeting time, when all, that could, attended meeting. The intermission between the morning and afternoon service was spent in religious conversation or reading. After public service and dinner, the children were instructed in reading in the Primer, Psalter or Testament, and in the Assembly's Catechism; the older children committed Scripture and hymns to memory; the younger were taught the Lord's prayer, the commandments, and some short hymns and prayers. Religious conversation, particularly relating to the public services, reading the Scriptures and prayer, closed the exercises of the day.

No playing, amusement, walking abroad, or unnecessary work was allowed. Some of the most respectable in the town were appointed tithing-men, whose badge of office was a long staff or pole. They took care, that all should be in the meeting-house before the beginning of service, and noticed any disorder, that took place in or out of the house, and absence from public worship. All travelling and servile labor were by law forbidden.

The Sabbath was far from being a day of gloom and weariness, as it has been too often represented. Children perhaps were sometimes too much restrained. As it was a day of rest, there was a solemn stillness. The fields, the trees, and every thing around were clothed with an impressive grandeur. The ox, freed from his yoke, was refreshed and at perfect ease; and man, having cast aside his cares and toil, with soul serene and elevated, beheld the works of God, and, though there was no voice nor speech, learned to adore the Majesty of heaven, and to feed his soul with the bread of life. His body relieved from labor and his mind from care, he read with delight the sacred Word ; and thus prepared for the journey of life, went on his way rejoicing. Meeting his fellow worshippers cherished his social affections, and strengthened him for the faithful and cheerful discharge of the duties of the week and of life. Thus the trials and duties of life were met with fortitude, temptations overcome, selfishness, passion, and pride subdued, the bounties of Providence enjoyed with gratitude, and Christian progress and improvement attained.

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

A whole world of habits and usages, once in active exercise in New England rural life has passed away almost entirely, never to return. Increased population, centering in larger villages and cities, labor-saving machinery, increase of manufactures, the division of labor, change of occupations, rail-road, telegraphic and telephonic intercourse, the influx of foreigners with different habits, and the emigration of the native-born Yankee to the west and south, have disintegrated and swept away the manners and customs of fifty or a hundred years ago. The pioneer days and habits are gone. Society has grown less neighborly, but more philanthropic. Association has taken the place of individualism. Man has lost something which mankind has gained. The huskings, quiltings, wood-haulings, chopping-bees, sleigh-rides, hunting-matches, afternoon tea-parties, raisings, house-warmings,—all have passed into history. Instead, we have picnics, Sunday school and otherwise, sea-side, mountain, and rail-road excursions, camping out for pleasure where once it was extreme necessity, country weeks, granges, lodges, summer boarding, the European or Pacific coast trip, church suppers and sociables, fairs and expositions to the end of the chapter. Men and women live less in private and more in public. Everything is interviewed, reported and published. The fierce light that once beat upon thrones and palaces now beats upon the cottage and the cabin. All the world is knowing what every body is saying, doing, and planning.

There were many Abbots around Wilton, N. H. Abiel (5) was one of its leading citizens for many years. In 1888, it was decided to publish a History of Wilton, as well as biographical sketches of its leading citizens. It was also 100 years since Wilton was settled, so a Centennial was planned.

Times were changing fast and in 1888 Dr. Abiel Abbot, brother of Ezra (6), gave the Wilton Centennial address, which follows and describes life on Abbot Hill following the Revolutionary War.

"I will say a word about Sunday of olden times. On Saturday evening the work of the week was finished. My father, after washing and putting on a skillet of water, would get his razor and soap, sit down by the fire and take off his beard ; after which he would take his Bible, or sometimes some other book. My mother after washing the potatoes, etc., and preparing for Sunday food, used to make hasty-pudding for supper, which was eaten in milk, or, if that was wanting, with butter and molasses. The little children were put to bed ; early in the evening my father read a chapter in the Bible and offered a prayer, soon after which, the younger part of the family and the hired help went to bed ; indeed the family went to rest every night soon after supper, especially in the summer. Saturday night, and Sunday, and Sunday night a perfect stillness—no play going on, no laughing. Those of us who were old enough took the Testament, or learned the Catechism or a hymn ; and read in the Testament or Primer to father or mother, in the morning. For breakfast, when we had sufficient milk, we had bread and milk ; when this failed, bean and corn porridge was the substitute. Sometime after the Revolutionary war, for Sunday morning tea and toast were often used. As we lived at a distance from meeting (nearly three miles), those who walked set out pretty soon after nine o'clock, and those who rode on horseback were obliged to start soon after them ; the roads and pole bridges were very bad, and the horses always carried double, and often a child in the mother's lap, and sometimes another on the pommel of the saddle before the father. All went to meeting, except some one to keep the house and take care of the children who could not go to church or take care of themselves at home. The one that staid at home was instructed when to put the pudding, pork and vegetables into the pot for supper after meeting. Those who went to meeting used to put into their pockets for dinner some short-cake or doughnuts and cheese.

We used to get home from meeting at four o'clock, often much later. Immediately the women set the table, and the men took care of the horses, and in the winter, of the cattle, sheep, pigs, etc. In the short days it would often be sundown before, or very soon after, we got home. The sled with oxen was often used for meeting when the snow was deep, or by those who did not keep a horse. After supper the children and younger part of the family were called together and read in the Testament and Primer, and if there was time, said their Catechism (the Assembly's) and some short hymns and prayers. Soon after this, in the summer, before my father read in the Bible and offered prayer, the cows were brought from the pasture and milked. No work was performed except what was absolutely necessary; the dishes for breakfast and supper were left unwashed till Monday. Every person in the town able to go to meeting went; if any were absent, it was noticed, and it was supposed that sickness was the reason. If anyone was absent three or four Sundays, the tything-man would make him a visit; this, however, was a rare case. The Sabbath was not unpleasant to me; early habit, I suppose, rendered the restraint by no mean sirsome. I do not recall feeling gloomy, or disposed to play, or wishing Sunday was gone or would not come. I do not think of anything more to say about Sunday, except that the meeting-house was well filled.

"Now what more shall I say? A word about schools. These were poor enough. We used to read, spell, write and cipher after a sort. Our teachers were not taught. The Primer, Dilworth's spelling book, and the Bible or Testament were the books. No arithmetic; the ciphering was from the master's manuscript. My father became sensible that the schools were useless, and in the winter of 1782 hired Mr. John Abbot, who was then a sophomore in college, to teach a month or five weeks in his vacation, and invited the district to send their children gratis. This gave a new complexion to the school in the south district; and for a number of years after, qualified teachers were employed about eight weeks in the winter, usually scholars from college. Soon after the improvement in the south district, some of the other districts followed in the same course. To this impulse, I think, we may impute the advance of Wilton before the neighboring towns in education, good morals and sound theology. I venerate my father and mother, more for their anxiety and sacrifices to give their children the best education, literary and religious, in their power, than for anything else. And it gives me, as I have no doubt it did them, and must you and all the rest of their descendants, the highest satisfaction that their desires were so well gratified, and their labors successful.

Their children, grand-children, and so on to the twentieth generation will have reason to bless the memory of parents of such true worth.

"Now for something else. For breakfast in olden times were bread and milk, as soon as the cows were milked, for all the family. When milk failed, bean porridge with corn. About nine o'clock there was a "baiting" or luncheon of bread and cheese, or fried pork and potatoes. For dinner a good Indian pudding, often in it blueberries and suet; pork and beef through the winter and spring; potatoes, turnip and cabbage, etc. At four or five o'clock p. m., in the summer some bread and cheese or the like. For supper bread and milk. When milk failed, milk porridge, hasty pudding and molasses, bread and molasses, bread and beer, etc. When there was company to entertain, chocolate for breakfast; no coffee.

"Pewter basins or porringers and sometimes wooden bowls were used when spoons were required; trenchers or wooden plates were used at dinner; when a friend dined, pewter plates were used by father and mother and the friend. You probably remember the pewter platters and plates usually standing on the shelves. None but pewter spoons. The cup for beer was pewter. After which came the brown mug. If a neighbor came in for any purpose, he was asked to drink beer or cider. When women visited their neighbors, they went early in the afternoon, carried their work, and returned home before sundown to take care of milking the cows, and so forth. Their entertainment was commonly shortcake baked by the fire, and tea, except in the early part of the Revolutionary war. For the visit they often put on a clean chequered apron and handkerchief and short loose gown.

"In the winter several of the neighbors would meet for a social evening, and would have a supper. There were no select parties: all were neighbors in the Scripture sense. The maid and boy in the family, the same as the children in all respects. I do not recollect ever hearing a profane word in my father's family from any of his hired men, nor at school at Wilton or Andover academy. I do not think that profane language was used by any in the town till after the Revolutionary war. Industry and economy were the order of the times. I do not remember seeing my father or mother angry: they were sometimes displeased, no doubt. My father in the winter used to go to Salem or Marblehead to market with shooks, hogshead staves, rye, pork, butter, etc., and procure salt, molasses, tea, rum, etc., for the year, as there were no traders in the new town. Rum was not used except in haying and harvest, and on particular occasions of hard service and exposure, such as washing sheep, burning large pieces of woodland, etc. Intoxication was very rare; I do not remember more than one man being intoxicat-ed. Rum was commonly used at raising buildings; half a gill was a good dram. After raising a building, if finished before night, the amusements were wrestling, goal, quoits, etc. Goal was the favorite play with boys the day after Thanksgiving, and election days, which were all the holidays I remember. Good humor and cheerfulness always prevailed in our family, and it was generally so, I believe."

Speaking of the mothers, the same writer as above says: "They came to houses not finished, not painted, not ceiled, as we see them now; they had no parlor, no carpets, no curtains, no sofa: for some of these every-day conveniences they had no word in their vocabulary. But they were happy,—happiness is the property of mind. They took good care of the household. They wrought flax and wool; the card, the spinning-wheel and the loom were the furniture of the house. All were clothed with domestic products; articles were also made for the market. They were healthy and strong; they and their daughters were not enfeebled by luxuries and delicacies, nor with working muslins and embroidery; tea and cake were rarely used; coffee was unknown. Their dress was plain, and adapted to the season and their business; one dress answered for the day and the week. Their living and dress produced no consumption as now.

"Our fathers and mothers were benevolent, hospitable and kind; the stranger was received, as in the most ancient time, with a hearty welcome. In their own neighborhood and town, they were all brothers and sisters. There was an admirable equality, a home-feeling and a heart-feeling among all. Their visits were not formal, ceremonious and heartless, but frank, cheerful and cordial. Their sympathy for the sick, unfortunate and distressed was expressed by their ready assistance and kindly affectionated help. When prosperous all partook in the common joy: when sickness or calamity befell any, all were affected, the sorrow was mutual, and aid and relief, as far as possible, were afforded. They were indeed one family—all members of one sympathizing body."
